DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, MYSORE.

Circular No. 8.

BROACH COTTON DISTRIBUTION, 1913.

As an important measure of agricultural improvement in the cotton growing tracts of the Mysore Province, the Department of Agriculture took up during the year 1912-13, the introduction of varieties of cotton which are likely to yield a larger money return to the raiyat than the varieties grown largely at the present time. A survey of the soil and other conditions of this tract made by the Department in the early part of 1912, revealed the fact that, in the ordinary black cotton soils of these areas the locally grown sannahatti or jowarihatti could be replaced by Broach cotton. In order to make a beginning in the introduction of this variety, the cotton growing raiyats of these tracts were canvassed as to their willingness to grow this variety; the advantages were explained in village meetings and to individual raiyats and a Kanarese leaflet was published describing the variety and giving full instructions about the methods of cultivation. About 130 raiyats signified their willingness to grow this crop and 4,666 lbs. of seed were obtained from Navsari through the Bombay Department of Agriculture and distributed.

During the growing season the crop was inspected more than once by the Officers of the Department and it is very gratifying to note that the crop has, on the whole, done exceedingly well. The Department, after securing an estimate of the probable quantity of the cotton that may be coming into the market, placed itself in communication with the principal
